GLACIER for the windows and doors.

Glacier is an imitation of stained glass that is made in a great variety of patterns, grounds and borders, and when applied on plain glass gives it the appearance of being

CRIME IN SANTA FE.

"According to the Opinion the cause of these wholesale murders was notorious.
All the worst cut-throats in the country were under the protection of persons holding public office, who employed them for their deplorable purposes.
As for the Justices of Peace in the rural departments they were, for the most part, the greatest ruffians that could be found. With rare exceptions they were a menace to the life and property of every honest man in the country."

Meantime the Argentine Government seems as unconcerned about such a state of things as if these crimes were taking place in Patagonia or Yucatan.
Gangs of assassins are allowed to go at large without molestation.

We can well remember that when Mr.
Cambaceres's horses were stolen, in 1888, the whole machinery of the Law was set in motion until the robbers were arrested and punished. Are the lives of colonists of less value than horses?

OUR LONDON LETTER.

STILL THE DEAD PRINCE.

(From our own Correspondent.)

January 19th.

Winter weather, made more dark and dismal by death and its draperies. The death list in the Times, which under ordinary circumstances only the gloomy in mind and the curious tale the trouble to look at, now literally commands attention by its abnormal length. Preparations for the funeral of the Duke of Clarence to-morrow absorb public interest, and that people have to spare for other matters is shown in the latest prescription for influenza, which has been pronounced almost officially to be "a dangerous and infectious disease."

The military authorities were not allowed to allow their two precious robes to be exposed to the damp and the germs of influenza by lying the streets to-morrow.
Neither on that account or owing to the good sense and feeling of the Prince and Princess of Wales, no fuss is to be made at the young duke's funeral. At the Queen's request, he is to be buried in St. George's Chapel, Windsor; but the body is not even to be taken to the funeral. The Prince and Princess of Wales are to be buried in the same way from Sandringham and to be shut out to the North London is to go direct nominally, though by a very indirect route via Stratford, Gunnersbury, Kew, Twickenham, Staines and so on.

The funeral will be a military pageant of modest proportions, attended by the foreign Ambassadors near this court and a few special representatives of the Royal Families. The Queen will not be present, as her medical advisers will not permit her to undertake the journey in this inclement weather. As far as we know, no ladies will be present, not even the Princess of Wales. Prince George is not allowed by the doctors to move from Sandringham.
Most of the shops of London will be closed to-morrow, just as the West End and well-lit theatres closed themselves yesterday. I take up my pen to write you this, and without hint or instruction from prefect or Lord Chamberlain. Still they manage these things better in Egypt.
Our custom in this climate of dangling with the paraphernalia of death for a week is barbarous and shows to have no explanation but the necessities of dress-making. The Queen, in her journeys to the shore of the Mediterranean may have indulged in classical notions, less given orders that at the funeral to-morrow nothing is to be draped in black but the pulpit.
The chapel and the railway stations are to have no decoration but flowers. The
